The crash was terrible. As the trains came together, the engines reared high from the track, while their momentum drove them fairly through each other, and then, with hissing steam and boiling water pouring from every seam and rivit, they fell into the ditch alongside the track. Five cars were telescoped into one another until there was little but a jumble of wood and iron remaining. Panic-stricked passengers were bruised and stunned and thrown from their berths and seats. With the first crash the lives of the doomed went out. The engineer fireman and two postal clerks of the passenger, and the fireman and front brakeman of the freight train were instantly killed. The engineer of the freight train jumped from the engine and escaped lostant death, but was seriously injured. The postal cars caught fire and the flames rapidly spread to the express and baggage, smoker and first-class coach. The Tone of Recent Stories. A misguided person recently, who was desirous of being cheerful, and seeking something that would raise his spirits, and who had perhaps in his soul a hankering after beauty, said that he could not find in any book shop or newsstand a novel or short story of recent date that was not unpleasant in subject, and did not end either in despair or degradation. Even in the railway trains the same discouraging and altogether dyspeptic papulum was offered to him; the train seemed to be run by Schopenhauer. Every day a shoal of fiction is issued, and it is nearly all of this character. All the young writers catch this note. We cannot deny their sincerity. They do not yet know by experi ence that it is not a cheerful world they have fallen into, but their attitude to life is that of sadness, investigating sadness aided by a microscope. The duty is laid upon them of studying life as it really is, of exposing its weakness and imperfection, its evil and its ugliness. This study is usually made without hope. And the study being always downward, it comes to be felt that one cannot be altogether sincere without being sad and too often coarse.— Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's.

A Refreshing Operation. Wash the head, especially the back part, in water just as hot as can be at borne. Take a sponge or towel, soak it in the hot water, and put it on the back of the neck, holding the head down and letting the hot water run over it. Repeat this four or five minutes and the face will look like a boiled lobster. Then take a dash of cold water, wipe the head dry, lie

Moreover—this is for the ladies—it's the best thing in the world to give a good, clear complexion.—New York
